11 Subject Descriptions

DART104 Introduction to Sociology

This subject provides an engaging and accessible introduction to Sociology, which is the study of society. Sociology enriches our understanding of the social world, gives us tools to use in assessing and reflecting on social life. Introduction to Sociology highlights the everyday relevance of Sociology. It invites students to 'see Sociology in the world' – to make meaningful connections between the subject matter of the subject and students' own social worlds. The subject introduces Sociology's examination of the connections between individual behaviour and wider social forces, using case studies of families, genders, sexualities, class inequalities, migration, ethnicities, new media and celebrity.

DART108 The Modern World: Revolutions, Nations, Empires, 1750-1913

In the 1750s, the world consisted of many different societies, cultures, states and empires. They were linked not only by trade but also in other ways: ideas, technologies and conflicting notions of the way the world should be. This subject looks at the development of the Modern World and the political, social and economic elements that made it. It includes matters as diverse as revolutions and daily life, gender, trade, human rights, political movements, religion, war and mass culture. Case studies are used to illustrate the broader themes in the subject, which will vary from year to year.

DASH100 Learning in Higher Education

DASH110 Australian Studies

This subject explores images of Australians, the Australian nation, and the Australian continent. It approaches the subject from an historical and cultural perspective and asks what being Australian has meant to different people at different times. We consider social groups and individuals who have shaped dominant notions of national identity and those who have challenged them. What does being Australian mean, for example, to Indigenous people, to women, to immigrants and how have those meanings changed over time? The subject also critically examines expressions of Australian identity through some of its national practices and rituals such as Australia Day, Anzac Day, Mardi Gras, tourism, and the beach.

DASH121 Global Politics and Power

This subject explores the sources of power in the modern 'globalised' world. It examines politics and power within societies and states and then surveys international projections of power through political, economic, and military means. It analyses the role of key international organisation and also introduces debates around inequality in the global order. Other issues such as racism, nationalism, human rights, and gender politics are considered. Finally, the subject assesses attempts to reform the contemporary global order and also looks at social and other movements that have organised resistance to it.

DASH130 Social Determinants of Health

In this subject, we explore health within a social context to gain an understanding of how the conditions in which people live, work and age shape their health and well-being. The subject will provide an introduction to key theoretical and methodological concepts that underpin the conceptualisation of health as a social concept. We will also explore some of the important insights and challenges arising from the social determinants approach. Throughout the subject, examples will explore health inequalities as experienced by some of the most vulnerable and marginalised populations and groups, with an emphasis on Indigenous experiences from Australia and internationally.

DSSC104 Introduction to Human Geography

Human Geography investigates the interconnections between people and place. A key strength of Human Geography is the way it invites natural and human worlds into conversation and responds to questions about how individuals and communities live in a rapidly changing world. Introduction to Human Geography applies key geography concepts – such as space, place, scale, environment and change – to help students understand social and environmental crises, and the role of individuals and communities in encouraging socially just and sustainable futures. The subject fosters a critical approach to understanding a range of contemporary debates in Human Geography related to human-environment relationships, social-spatial inequalities and globalisation. Students will employ a range of geographical tools in both classroom and field-based studies and will gain a range of transferable skills and competences useful in other subject areas.

DSSC106 Academic Skills for Social Science

Academic Skills for Social Science is an interdisciplinary subject that assists students to develop a range of academic and digital literacy skills required for successful study and completion of their undergraduate degree. This subject will teach students how to incorporate evidence-based decision-making into their academic and future professional practice by developing and applying critical thinking, literature searching, critical appraisal, and communication skills. It adopts an adult-learning approach and aims to develop competencies required for self-directed learning appropriate to a broad range of undergraduate programs in the social science and health disciplines.

PREP030 Launch

This subject explores the common expectations and experiences of university study in order to assist students to transition effectively to a higher education learning environment. Students will be introduced to the technological platforms and skills required to effectively complete their studies, the importance of academic integrity, available support services and resources, and strategies to develop capabilities of independent learning. Students will be engaged in presentations and activities related to these aspects of academic life to cultivate the development of their student identity in the context of a learning community.

PREP031 Language for Learning

This subject provides students with opportunities to develop their knowledge of, and competence and confidence in the use of text-based language in preparation for future studies. Students will be introduced to a variety of text types and genres commonly used in tertiary study, with a focus on engaging with, and critically analysing, sources of information in terms of purpose for writing, the style employed and writing techniques evident in the text. The focus is on developing language skills and improving students' capability to both evaluate the content of a variety of texts, and to employ that knowledge in their own written and spoken tasks.

PREP032 Scientific Thinking

This subject provides students with a functional understanding of the basic tenets of science, the underlying cognitive skills that allow us to solve complex problems, and strategies to investigate and interpret the world around us. Students will be challenged with problem-solving activities relevant to the sciences to develop a range of key cognitive capacities, including critical, logical and creative thinking, and an understanding of concepts such as objectivity, variables, theory, and Occam's razor. The focus is on developing skills required to design, conduct, analyse and present the findings of primary research related to a United Nations Sustainable Development Goal (UN SDG). Students will also develop their global citizenship through evaluating the significance of their selected SDG, and its relevance to their future study and career pathways.

PREP033 Mathematics for the Humanities

This subject provides an introductory study of mathematics and statistics as a foundation for further study in disciplines including Business and the Humanities. Mathematics for the Humanities focusses on reinforcing the fundamental concepts of basic arithmetic, basic algebra, linear equations, probability and statistics. The subject familiarises students with language, terminology and analytical problem-solving techniques used in mathematics and statistics.
